CLPs to have the right to submit a rule change AND a contemporary issue

Rulebook 2010. Section B. Chapter 3. Rule 3C Procedural rules for party conference. Conference Rule 2 - agenda. Clause 2C

The last two sentences of Clause 2C reads as follows: ‘Alternatively, a constitutional amendment on one subject only may be submitted in writing. Contemporary issues and constitutional amendments must be received by the General Secretary at the offices of the Party by the closing date determined by the NEC.’

Amendment

Delete ‘Alternatively’ and replace by ‘also’.

Supporting arguments

The right of CLPs and affiliated organisations to amend the Party’s Constitution is an important democratic right. There should be no restriction on this right. At present, CLPs and affiliated organisations can submit either a rule amendment or a ‘contemporary issue’, but not both. This is an arbitrary and unnecessary restriction, since there is no link whatsoever between rule changes and ‘contemporary issues’. The above rule change would remove this unreasonable restriction.

Ministers to be ineligible to serve on CAC

The Labour Party Rule Book 2010. Section B. Chapter 4 Elections of national officers of the party and national committees. C Procedural rules for elections for national committees. 1B Election of Conference Arrangements Committee. Sub clause ii reads as follows:

Every affiliated organisation and CLP may nominate an eligible member of the party for a seat on the CAC.

Amendment

Add at end: 'Members of the government (when the Party is in power) and members of the Parliamentary Committee (when the Party is in opposition) are ineligible to stand for the CAC.'

Supporting arguments

The CLPs have two seats on the Conference Arrangements Committee (CAC) and for many years these were occupied by rank and file members. In recent years, however, they have often been filled by government ministers. To operate as it should, the CAC must always be independent. Most controversial issues at conference relate to government policy and this puts the ministers in an impossible position. They cannot serve two masters. They are always under pressure to follow the government line, rather than the democratic interest of the delegates. This rule change would prevent such a clash of interests.

More NEC seats for CLPs
National Executive Committee: Representation of Scotland and Wales

The Labour Party Rule Book 2010. Section B. Chapter 4 Elections of national officers of the party and national committees. C Procedural rules for elections for national committees. 1A Election of the National Executive Committee. Sub clause ic reads as follows:

Line 1 Division III (CLPs) shall consist of six
Line 2 members, at least three of whom
Line 3 shall be women, to be nominated by Line 4 their own CLP and at least two other Line 5 CLPs. The ballot for these places shall Line 6 be conducted among all eligible
Line 7 individual members of the party by
Line 8 means of a national one-member-
Line 9 one-vote postal ballot conducted to Line 10 guidelines laid down by the NEC.

Amendment

Line 1: Delete: 'six' and insert: 'eight'

Line 2: Delete: 'three' and insert: 'four'

Line 5: After 'ballot for' insert: 'six of'

Line 9: After 'ballot.' insert: 'There shall be two separate ballots for the two remaining places, one in Scotland and one in Wales. They shall be conducted among all eligible individual members of the party in Scotland and Wales respectively by means of a one-member-one-vote postal ballot. All three ballots to be'

Supporting Arguments

The Scottish and Wales Labour Parties have a separate identity to that in the English Regions and each has its own General Secretary. In addition the Scottish and Welsh parties now monitor the work of the Labour Groups in the Scottish parliament and Welsh Assembly. There is therefore a strong case for automatic representation on the NEC from Scotland and Wales.

Our suggested rule change increases CLP representation from six to eight. It would redress the loss of a seat from seven to six which CLPs suffered in 1997 when Partnership in Power was first introduced.

Four plus four should equal eight

The Labour Party Rule Book 2010, Section B, Chapter 3 Party Conference, 3C (Procedural rules for Party Conference), Conference Rule 2 – agenda, Clause 2C reads as follows:

‘All affiliated organisations and CLPs may submit one contemporary issue which is not substantially addressed by reports of the NEC or NPF to Conference . The CAC shall determine whether the issues meet these criteria and submit all issues received to a priorities ballot at the start of conference. The ballot will be divided into two sections. One section for CLPs and one section for trade unions and other affiliated organisations. At least the four priorities selected by CLPs will be time-tabled for debate, as will at least the first four priorities selected by Trade Unions and other affiliated organisations. Issues must be in writing, on one subject only and in ten words or less and may be supported by an explanation of why the issue should be prioritised. Alternatively, a constitutional amendment on one subject only may be submitted in writing. Contemporary issues and constitutional amendments must be received by the General Secretary at the offices of the party by the closing date determined by the NEC.’

Amendment

Replace the words ‘At least the four priorities selected by CLPs will be time-tabled for debate, as will at least the first four priorities selected by Trade Unions and other affiliated organisations’ with:

‘At least the first four priorities selected by Trade Unions and other affiliated organisations will be time-tabled for debate, as will at least the first four priorities (excluding those selected by the Trade Unions and other affiliated organisations) selected by CLPs

Supporting Arguments

Partnership in Power structures introduced in 1997 limited members’ direct input into conference to only four subjects. In practice these were chosen by the unions. Thanks mainly to union dissatisfaction with the way conference was being ‘managed’, the 2003 conference passed a rule change which provided for four subjects also to be chosen by the CLPs. But when it came to voting for priorities, CLP delegates were pressurised first by ministers in ‘briefing’ sessions, then by party officials when collecting their ballot papers, that they should vote for the priorities chose by the unions because there would not be time to debate more than four subjects. The result has been that, in most years since, only one additional subject has been debated. The New Labour Plan to avoid debate and the possibility of the platform’s defeat on controversial subjects was therefore largely achieved. This rule change would ensure that eight subjects are debated every year, four chosen by the trade unions and four additional subjects chosen by the CLPs. This would increase the role of CLPs and the influence of annual conference, the party’s sovereign body.

Ending the delay before rule changes are timetabled

The Labour Party Rule Book 2010, Section B, Chapter 3 Party Conference, Section C Procedural rules for party conference, Conference rule 2 - Agenda.

Amendment

At end create a new clause I as follows: 'All constitutional amendments submitted by affiliated organisations and CLPs that are accepted as in order shall be timetabled for debate at the first annual party conference following their submission.'

Supporting Arguments

The procedure outlined in this rule amendment was precisely the procedure for changing the Party's constitution up until 1968. At the 1968 Conference it was agreed to adopt a convention so that in future all rule change proposals from trade unions and from CLPs (but not from the NEC) should be subject to a year's delay before being timetabled. The idea was that this would enable the NEC to examine the proposals in detail and at length and then make a considered response to the following year's conference. The NEC's detailed response would then be timetabled at Conference alongside the rule change proposal. This convention may have been well intentioned but in practice the NEC invariably only gives cursory attention to their proposals and their response is usually one line.

The closing date for submitting rule amendments is normally early June and the annual conference is not until late September. Under the above proposed rule change the NEC would therefore have nearly 4 months to give the issue their attention; they do not need another whole year. All the 1968 convention does is annoy and frustrate the unions and the CLPs. It is well past its 'sell by' date.

Time for a new Clause IV

The Labour Party Rule Book 2010, Section B, Chapter 1 Clause IV (Aims and Values)

Delete whole clause and replace with the following:

‘ The Labour Party is a socialist party committed to democracy, human rights and the promotion of human welfare. Labour recognises that the capitalist economic system based on the private ownership of the means of production, distribution, and the accompanying financial system, has historically provided for an expansion of output and hence a basis for higher living standards. It has, nevertheless, always been associated with successive booms and slumps, periodic mass unemployment, social deprivation and gross inequalities in the distribution of wealth, income and opportunities for social improvement. Capitalism is motivated by the pursuit of private profit. This motivation can sometimes stimulate initiative and enterprise. It can also lead to catastrophic downturns in economic activity and has been an important factor contributing to war. Socialism, based upon the public ownership of key sectors of the economy, control of the financial system, and the democratic participation of the workforce in the setting and checking of objectives, would provide the basis for steadier expansion, higher living standards, much less inequality and the elimination of periodic mass unemployment. We recognise that private trade and enterprise will continue to occupy an important role in distribution, services, many sectors of manufacturing and some financial services. We are committed to providing an economic and social framework within which private firms will be able to prosper and contribute to public welfare. We seek at all times to promote economic progress, sustained employment, and social security affecting health, pensions and disabilities. We will work for equal rights for all regardless of race, gender, class, age, disability, sexual preference or religion. We recognise the important role of trade unions in protecting and advancing the interests of working people and hence are committed to good international standards on trade union rights, including recognition, collective bargaining, workers’ participation in decisions affecting their welfare, and employment rights, including rights in the conduct of disputes. Similarly, we recognise the importance of cooperative principles in productive industry, distribution, in the provision of mortgages for housing and in other areas of activity. We encourage the application of cooperative principles. Labour is committed to the maintenance and strengthening of democracy, in which government at all levels is elected by and held accountable to the people. On the basis of these principles Labour seeks the support of the public, and encourages public participation in democratic discussion and the machinery of politics.’

Supporting Arguments

The worst economic crisis since the early 1930s has shown that our Party must shake off the previously neo-liberal ideology that has gripped many of our parliamentarians, not to mention the Tory and Lib Dem parties. This ideology encompasses a naive and 19th century belief in the efficacy of the ‘invisible hand of the market.’ This ideology has also meant deference to the City financiers and bankers and to the private sector in general, together with a neglect of manufacturing. Labour will never prosper by being a watered down version of the Lib Dems or Tories. Our Party can only prosper on the basis of the aims and values which have always sustained us and which always will. We have tried to set out these aims and values in our rewritten Clause IV. If your CLP feels it can improve on our wording then please amend it.
